

THE SPECTATOR

- CAPAX INFINITI -

The country which was once called 'Little Venice' by the explorer Amerigo Vespucci no longer has the city's beauty and charm. The country that was once the wealthiest in the region is now ravaged by a severe economic crisis, crippling hyper-inflation and a failed attempt at demonetization. There are severe food shortages, lack of basic amenities, huge debts and to top it all, a political crisis. Nicolás Maduro, the president of Venezuela is scrambling to desperately cling on to power and in the process is pushing his country towards a dictatorial regime.

Maduro came to power for a second six year term recently in a largely rigged election, getting 68 percent of the votes. He used the worsening economic crisis to coerce the voters to vote for him as a failure to do so would result in them losing the government subsidies. That is a big deal as without the government subsidies, many Venezuelans would go hungry. He also banned two popular opposition leaders, Leopoldo Lopez and Henrique Capriles from running in the election. "I give and you give", is what he said to the voters.

Maduro's re-election is a bad news for Venezuelans as he has refused to enact reforms to help the country's suffocating currency exchange policy, diversify the economy away from oil dependence, and reboot the national oil company, whose production has been plummeting in recent months.

Maduro may have termed his victory 'historic' but many in the international community have refused to acknowledge his win. The Lima group, a bloc of fourteen mainly Latin American countries, concerned with restoring democracy in Venezuela, has officially refused to recognize the legitimacy of Maduro's election. The United States of America too has described the elections as a 'sham' and the European Union is calling for fresh elections.

There are no checks present on President Nicolás Maduro's powers and his re-election has made chances of Venezuela's recovery from the economic crisis more bleak. His authoritarian tendencies keep on growing and unless and until there is pressure on him to enact reforms, he is likely to lead the country to further economic, social and political collapse.

VENEZUELA- FROM RICHES TO RAGS TO DICTATORSHIP

AND THEN THERE WERE NONE. BECAUSE OBVIOUSLY JULIUS CAESAR OR ADOLF HITLER COULD NOT SURVIVE THESE HILARIOUSLY KILLING EVENTS.

HOW WE LAUGHED BACK THEN

BY RAGHAVI AGARWAL

SU7 When Switzerland invaded a country "by mistake."

Switzerland - the world's most neutral country "invaded" Liechtenstein in 2007 with 170 infantry soldiers. What had actually happened was that the infantry walked over the border, discovered their mistake, turned back, made the call up the chain to explain themselves, so the Swiss government could apologize. Liechtenstein didn't know it had happened until they got the apology. Is it too late now to say sorry? Try too early.

Buzz-KILLERS

Union General John Sedgwick was shot and killed moments after standing from his trench and telling his men to stand because Confederate soldiers 'couldn't hit an elephant at this distance.'

The Bucket

In 1325 there was rivalry between the city-states of Bologna and Modena. A few Modenese soldiers stole a bucket from a well in Bologna, and war was started. The war was won by Modena, so the bucket still remains in Modena.

The Great Emu War

After World War 1, the Australian military started, "The Great Emu War" in 1932, where they tried to kill emus with machine guns. Six days after the first engagement, 2,500 rounds of ammunition had been fired but no emu was killed. In the end, it was declared that the emus had won the war.

Monkey Propaganda

During the Napoleonic Wars, residents of Hartlepool witnessed a French ship capsize off the coast. They found that everyone on board had died, except for a little monkey. As subjects of severe wartime propaganda, the Englishmen believed that the monkey was an actual Frenchman. They also saw that the monkey was dressed in full French military regalia which confused them even more. They decided to interrogate the furry creature. But the monkey wouldn't talk and they assumed it was just being uncooperative. Eventually they hung the monkey for being a Frenchman. Who's driving who bananas?

UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL

The time the world changers became bottle flipping champions at the United Nations Security Council, as reported by IP members Eishita and Nandini.

Day 3 in the United Nations Security Council saw another catastrophic crisis surface in the committee other than the situation in Sudan, Kordofan and Darfur, which consisted of the delegates not being able to flip bottles in one go. The International Press spectated (you see what we did there?) how the young world leaders and changers in making had originally taken part in formation of resolutions in the United Nations Security Council to solve the Sudan crisis but ended up flipping bottles. Instead of serving their purpose by having heated discussions in regards to the crisis, the delegates became competitors to the title of "Best Bottle Flipper". The presence of the Executive Board member, Vice President Mr. Raghav Wadhwa did not budge the dedicated and focused delegates to get back to work, and on being checked for the same the delegate of Bolivia very cheekily moved away from the table that became the battlefield of the battle of flips and feigned concentrating on his research papers. "I mean I was there, but I was here," was how he justified his gaffe. The Vice President, baffled at such unexpected behavior and the lack of professionalism or seriousness shown on the part of the delegates, could not help but let out a sigh of disappointment and ask the delegates to resume lobbying and working on their draft resolutions.

WHO IS IT?

The delegates of the United Nations Security Council witnessed guest appearances from quite a few Executive Board members from other committees. In the following report, Eishita and Nandini expose WHO some of them were.

One of them was the World Health Organization Director General Mr. Bhoomik Sharma, who was welcomed into the committee room amongst thunderous applause from the executive members of the UNSC, Mr. Narayan Sharma, President of the Council and Mr. Raghav Wadhwa, Vice President of the council, including the reporters and photographers of the International Press and the delegates. As the committee broke for a break to have their lunch, President Narayan and our guest Mr. Bhoomik Sharma took over quite some time of our photographers, Nayanika Bali and Manya Shiel, to get some Gabriel Macht and/or the Godfather photographs in the name of Executive Board headshots. The men then went ahead and borrowed two pairs of sunglasses from the IP (the reason we had sunglasses was that the sass levels of the International Press always demand us to have them). Finger guns, WWE (or WWF, depending on your age) back poses and the classic Godfather poster were some of the hundreds and thousands of poses dropped by our two EB members of the MODEL United Nations.

DAY 3 REPORT

UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL INTERVIEW WITH THE EB

THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE UNSC SHARES HIS OPINION ON THE CONFERENCE

Reporter: What is one thing you'd take back with yourself from LMGMUN?

Raghav Sir: LMGMUN never feels like work. When I come for LMGMUN from Delhi, I tell my parents that I'm going for work but that is not true. Every time I attend this event, despite working hours in the committee, the time spent with the secretariat or others just eating and basking the glory of Lucknow feels like vacation. The comfort that LMGMUN and Lucknow builds for my colleagues and me is something that I take back with myself. It's crazy.

Reporter: Have you been following The Spectator? Did you like it?

Raghav Sir: I have been following The Spectator and apart from the obvious astonishing fact that LMGMUN manages to print multiple coloured newsletters every year, which is unheard of from an MUN conference. From a technical point, the design of The Spectator is commendable for the IP and the designers, in regards to their efforts in making something that looks so professional in its aesthetics and its content. Your work with The Spectator is commendable.

Reporter: What was the deciding factor that led you to join your first MUN?

Raghav Sir: There were no deciding factors. I just got a call from my best friend telling me that there is an event that is hosting a Harry Potter trivia, and it was an MUN that had a HP committee. Being a huge Potterhead, I went there expecting a trivia and he made me sit in a committee, explaining the procedure 15 minutes before it and that was how I attended my first MUN. That great experience drove me to start munning.

Reporter: What kind of a culture do you think MUNs breed?

Raghav Sir: It is varied across India depending on the city. Putting the culture in a pigeonhole is difficult, but the one noticeable thing is the purpose of Munning has changed over the years. Something that started out as an educational activity, taken up to increase their arsenal of knowledge has become a commercialized shell of what it used to be. I'm not saying that there aren't people who Mun for education anymore, but in a major sense, mass commercialization has spoiled the academic bubble that used to surround MUNs. However, if done properly, like LMGMUN was, MUNs can provide budding kids a skillset that is rare to find in most of the educational activities that are propagated and taken up.

DEMOCRATIC-TO BE OR NOT TO BE

BY NOORIA FATIMA

It is a truth universally acknowledged that democracy in today's era of progress translates to the freedom to elect our own dictators.

Traditionally, Democracy indicates, apparently not clearly enough, the rule of citizens where the supreme power resides in the hands of the common multitude. However, today one witnesses the blurring of lines between it and Dictatorship, the rule of one, the dictator with absolute power in a state.

To the incredulity of some and resignation of others, a mere number of 19 countries can call them as fully democratic nation and neither the world's oldest nor the world's largest democracy forms a part of the Democratic 19.

Herein lie few examples of the Dictatorial Democracies:

The United States of America: Since the installment of Donald Trump, the country has seen vastly ghastly announcements. He has no intentions of listening to anyone as is seen by the resignations and sacking of a large number of government officials and advisors in the past 6 months itself.

Russia: Under Putin, said to be elected by "free and unfair" elections, Russia has seen brutal clashes within the state. Media manipulation, silenced speakers and bribery is quite ruthlessly prevalent in the state.

Philippines: Perhaps, President Duterte of Philippines is the most conflicted one yet. For someone who said "Shoot me if I ever become a dictator" he appears to be planning his quick demise but then another statement followed up with "If you say dictator, I am really a dictator. Because if I don't [act like a] dictator, nothing will happen to this nation. That's true."

Pakistan: Our very own neighbor also features on this list. Although Pakistan calls itself democratic yet the increasing control of the military in politics says otherwise. Evidence of not-so-democratic rulers is former President Parvez Musharraf, who came to power via a military coup and not elections.

It now seems that the so called "best form of government" is no longer the best or the favourite.

INTERVIEW WITH THE EXECUTIVE BOARD

Reporter: Sum up your experience of LMGMUN'18 in one sentence.

Raul Sir: Diplomacy at Class, to be pertinent

Karishma Ma'am: It is really spectacular and with every passing year, it keeps on growing. Love the hospitality

Reporter: What is your best memory of LMGMUN'18

Raul Sir: When I questioned the Delegate Of Egypt seeking her views on the functioning of President, Bashar-al-Assad's regime along with her contribution to Falkland Islands with respect to the agenda and she replied, "We can't do anything but our two very close friends(USA and Russia) who are currently bunking in our country, they can."

Karishma Ma'am: I have innumerable memories which makes it extremely difficult for me cherrypick one.

Reporter: If you could compare your fellow EB member to a fictional character, who would it be and why?

Raul Sir: Karishma would unequivocally be Wonder Woman, the reason here being that after a very long time I've seen an Executive Board member take up the Rules Of Procedure in such a great force. She's handled the committee really well.

Karishma Ma'am: I'd call him Batman because he rises from the darkness, handling conflicts in the best possible manner.

Reporter: If your committee was a zoo, would the delegates be sloths, greyhounds or cheetahs?

Raul Sir: At this point of time, they're basically cute penguins. But if I need to choose from the above categories, they would be greyhounds.

Karishma Ma'am: Half Of them would be cheetahs, because seeing yesterday's working paper(where they claimed absolute sovereignty), they seem to be waiting for a prey in order to catch them red handed.

Reporter: Sir, you functioned as a Delegate in the adjoining committee, the GCHQ. How did that go?

Raul Sir: The idea was not to demean any of the delegates but to direct them towards the architecture of GCHQ, as they were missing out on that perspective. It was quite a positive experience as it greatly helped the delegates and the committee to proceed with their agenda

UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY FOURTH COMMITTEE

DAY 3 REPORT

THE BEGINNING OF THE END

The reporters of UNGA- Zoya Azhar, Anoushka Goel and Lavanya Singh write about the proceedings of the third day of LMGMUN.

The conference for SPECPOL began way before the Executive Board even entered the conference room. It was not only the last but also the MOST important day of LMGMUN'18. The delegates rose up from their chairs and approached their fellow delegates with dignity, requesting for the latter's support and compliance with their draft resolutions. Some offers were accepted, while the others were turned down with...eh, nevermind.

The chairperson entered the room at 8:36am (precise enough?). Everyone in the room seemed to be in a hurry to claim the awards which they rightfully, read politically, deserve (or not?). The conference began and an unmoderated caucus was instantly passed. As usual, the room turned into a fish market in no time, and as usual, the Executive Board of the Government Communications Headquarters was found hanging around with the chairperson of SPECPOL. The absence of the vice chairperson was deeply felt until she finally arrived at 9:38am after having, what it seemed, a good night's sleep in the supposedly warm and cozy mattress of her room.

Three draft resolutions were formulated. Two of them were discussed from clause to clause (seemingly consisting of a lot of flaws), and one was declined. An unmoderated caucus was soon passed(again and prolly for the last time) and the committee turned not into a fish market, but into a wild, wild zoo. It got worse each second and the chairperson was quoted saying: "Negotiate- get your votes- with your voice- IN CONTROL!"

THE FLIGHT

BY SARA BATOOL

The young who wish to flee the nest,
Are first taught how to fly.
They stretch their wings and puff their breasts,
And learn how not to die.
Their mothers look upon their flights,
Their hearts full of a fear
That dares the earth recall the heights
And drag them back down here.

Motherland, we never left your shore,
Until the waves turned red;
We never sought your bosom more,
Than when they laid us dead.
They drove us out from your warm lap,
Into the deep, deep sea,
Where they turned the water black,
And let it flow freely.

Motherland, we never left your shore.
Until they made us leave;
And you, you did not lift your head,
To look at us, and grieve.
Yes, grieve, Mother. You swore a vow,
To cradle us in your arm,
Your land of green, to make our home,
To keep us out of harm.

The young who wish to flee the nest,
Are first taught how to fly.
They stretch their wings and puff their breasts,
And learn how not to die.
But those who hold their nests too dear,
Are pushed over the hill,
For mothers never know they fear,
Perfidy, not the kill.

GUN VIOLENCE IN USA

BY EISHITA

How many Sandy Hooks will they have to see?
How many scarring deaths will they have to witness?
How many basic necessities will they have to fight for?
How many times will you discredit mental health by crediting it for terrorism?
How many times will the skin color determine if the shooter is a terrorist or a “mad man”?
How many blood splatters and bullet wounds will it take?
How many times are you going to pick your crumbling prestige over innocent lives?
How many ‘thoughts and prayers’ will it take for you to acknowledge the real problem?
How many hashtag trends will it take for them to be able to go to school without a fear of the day being their last?
How many bloody hallways will it take for them to take “I’m going to kill the teacher” comments as jokes and not as a probable prophecy of the future?
How many shootings will it take for you to see your distorted version of Nazism?
How many lives will it take for you to regulate your gun laws?
How many shattered families will it take for you to finally DO something?
How many murders, USA? How many murders will you use to your advantage? How many?

DAY 3 REPORT WHO WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION

HELLO FROM THE OTHER SIDE

Sara and Shaaiyya explore the hypothetical world of Romeo, Juliet, Pyramus, and Thisbe.

Real

As the committee went on and on criticizing Sierra Leone, they demanded why her government had taken no action. They gave solutions that made her want to not listen to any more. The delegate stood up to give a speech, trying, reluctantly to defend her uncanny stand but she finally received a chit that fulfilled her high expectations (which aren't much higher than her heels). Excited and elevated, she could not stop smiling wondering if the committee would finally reach a consensus that would pull the people of Sierra Leone out of their pitiful state- she finally found an ally!

Not So Real

While the committee debated on the mental health conditions of the people affected by the Sierra Leone mudslide, all we could see was the delegate of Sierra Leone smiling to herself. We could not help but wonder, had she just got herself a date for the socials? We could see butterflies in the air and a cool breeze blowing through her hair, while the delegate beside her gave his speech. But, who was it really- was it love or just the AC blasting at 18°C?

THE ONE WITH THE CHITS

Shaaiyya and Sara write about their last day at LMGMUN'18, hoping to have made memories that last a lifetime.

The time had come- nervous delegates trying to finalise their reports on time, kids finishing their origami projects and failed attempts of bottle flips. After three days of rigorous debate, fights for the last 'Gulab Jamun' and lunch breaks spent playing 'Fortnite' on laptops, the last committee session unfolded with the smell of spaghetti setting in, while the hungry (read: famished) delegates were working towards a dynamic report after one (read: many) failed attempts, bubbling with anxiety about who would win the Best Delegate award. With eighteen minutes past the deadline and 5 percent battery left on their phones, the committee submitted the report and adjourned the meeting.

After the last session of the committee was concluded, the delegates decided on sending anonymous chits via the International Press (YAY! Finally food for survival!). While the delegate of Sierra Leone received several chits comparing her speed to one of a roller coaster going several thousand miles an hour, the delegate of Canada confounded us all with his infamous beatboxing skills. On that note, the delegates were satisfied with the outcome and were delighted to see the food and speedily retired for lunch.

WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION

INTERVIEW WITH THE EB

On the last day of LMGMUN, our reporters sat down with the Executive Board members to ask for their opinion on the conference.

Reporter: Describe this committee in five words or less

Lakshay Sir: Life is not fair.

Bhoomik Sir:- We kept surprising them.

Reporter: If your committee was a politician, who would it be?

Bhoomik Sir: Definitely Rahul Gandhi- his intentions are good but he just doesn't know how to do it.

Reporter: What were the things that you wanted to see happening in the committee, but you couldn't?

Sakshi Ma'am: The discussions in the committee have been going haywire, I would have liked to see more direction. Go further than the agenda and discuss Ebola, which is the need of the hour.

Bhoomik Sir: I wish they would have spoken more about the Ebola crisis. Right now, we have only talked about how torrential rainfall caused the mudslide and how it was the "government's fault".

Reporter: What are the things that you will remember about LMGMUN?

Bhoomik Sir: I will remember LMGMUN because of its people.

Lakshay: The rooms' AC at the place we are staying-it's great!

Reporter: How has the committee been going so far?

Sakshi Sir: The first day, the delegates did not know what to do but on Day 2 everything fell into place. The committee has been developing.

Bhoomik: The people are very plastic. If the delegates are here for an award they should work for it honestly, instead of arguing.

Reporter: How was your experience working with your fellow EB members?

Lakshay Sir: Both, Bhoomik and Sakshi are very knowledgeable and experienced people. They have successfully taught all the delegates what their purpose is and also that the committee should not be run just for the sake of it.

Sakshi Sir: I have worked with Bhoomik in the past and every time I learn something new from him.

WARSAW

BETRAYAL AND HOPE

BY ANOUSHKA GOEL

The city of Warsaw, the sprawling capital of Poland was a major centre of Jewish life and culture and a home to about 1.3 million people, before World War 2. However, as the saying goes that all beautiful things come to an end , the city too was crushed to ruins after Germany invaded the country in September 1939, killing thousands of Polish civilians and rendering havoc on historic monuments , leaving the city with a population of only 174,000.

Yet, far from unnerving the nation, German atrocities inspired one of the most dedicated and complex underground resistance movements in Europe- a network of 400,000 men and women known as the 'Armia Krajowa' or Home Army', which prepared for the moment when a coordinated strike against the Germans would liberate the city and its people.

It was in January 1945 that Soviet troops entered and liberated a devastated Warsaw. The uprising had a significant impact on the Jews as a people .It became a symbol of hope, assurance and strength. After years of struggle the uprising came to an end and the city too was soon rebuilt from its own rubble, which was used to produce bricks for the restoration of the Old Town, with its churches, palaces and market place - the most important testimonial of Polish culture. Today, the streets of Warsaw are filled with artists and musicians. It is an alpha global city, a major international tourist destination and a significant cultural, social and economic hub. It is the wealthiest capital in Europe, alongside Berlin.

Warsaw, also known as the 'Phoenix City', because of its extensive history and complete reconstruction is now Europe's most dynamic city .The picturesque Old Town of Warsaw which represents examples of nearly every European architectural style is now listed as a World Heritage Site. The city which was once seen as a lunar landscape of ruins, now stands as one of the most flourishing and resplendent cities - a living epitome of hope, determination and beauty.

SHAKESPEARE'S CHARACTERS IMAGINED AS MUNNERS

BY EISHITA

FERDINAND

"Fair Miranda, respond to my chits." This delegate is in the committee room with determination in their heart and only one purpose- To get the girl. They are attending the conference just for the socials.

LADY MACBETH

This Munner is known for being manipulative, either with their orating skills or with the speed at which they can twist their words. They have the ability to convince almost all of their naïve counterparts how good their policy or resolution is, even though the reality is a little too different. Being the best among the best is their only goal.

SHYLOCK

All they want from the MUN they are attending is a pound of flesh. They complain about the vegetarian food and the lack of good non-vegetarian food. While fellow munners look forward to sessions or socials, no judgments, but Shylock looks forward only to the breakfast, lunch and high tea. Their demands do not include resolutions, but kebabs.

PORTIA

This girl looks naïve and beautiful, the entire committee underestimates her of being the pretty little girl here only for the candids. However, she proves everybody wrong. Even though at her first mun, this well-researched and confident delegate is so good the veterans can become insecure.

NERISSA

They are also a first time munner that generally tag along with their confident best friend, mostly Portia. Generally, the one with crippling anxiety, or just bad research skills, they usually have a very vague idea about the debates going on.

MIRANDA

They are the classic clueless delegate. "Ladies and gentlemen" in place of "Respected delegates" is a meme at this point, all credits to them. The avid munners despise them and do not care to hide their feelings. With no speech or research, this delegate usually goes missing after a couple of speeches.

JULIUS CAESAR

This iconic Shakespeare character can be easily imagined as a veteran munner, the one proudly showcasing their multiple certificates. Experience is the teacher of all things, and they prove it right. They take muns seriously and aim to make a change in the world.

ROMEO

The boy or girl who attended the conference because their companion wanted them to be there. Adamant on being in the same committee, stuck together like the Siamese twins and feeding each other are some of the adorable/annoying activities that they indulge in. Quite a few of them ask the photographers for the #MunnersOfInstagram shot together.

US SENATE

REPORT
DAY 3

TEACHERS (ARE/ARE NOT) BEATERS

Raghavi and Muskaan write about the Gun Control and mental health issues spread across America.

When the Senate decided to (finally) take up the much avoided issue of Gun Control and President Trump's policies on the Second Amendment, a lot of controversial opinions came up.

The US Senators raised questions such as "Why doesn't anything happen to American citizens when they commit a crime but whole countries are banned from entering the States?" and "Why does the President only blame mental health issues for the increasing number of crimes and not his policies on Gun Control?" However, despite the discussion on mental health none of the Senators pointed out how the 2019 Fiscal Budget showed a 21% decrease for the Department Of Health And Human Services. Which is why the question "If Trump really thinks that the cause of violence is mental health issues and not gun control, why is he not doing anything about that either and rather decreasing the chance of any change happening?" could not be raised. The International Press couldn't help but notice these minor (read: major) unnoticed issues.

The suggestion to increase the legal age for buying a gun from 18 to 21 was also made but how the Senators expected the 21 year olds to not make wrong usage of the guns as much as an 18 year old would could not be understood.

NOTE: What follows is not a work of fiction. It is entirely true.

The debate on whether "Teachers should have guns or not" included statements such as "We should trust teachers because they are good guys" and "They have enough brains to not kill us." Statements such as "What if teachers kill students due to annoyance?" and "If teachers are given guns they will shoot students because they hit students with sticks" were also raised. Good going, Senators.

Senator Chris Coons, also made statements such as "The policies of Donald Trump are useless because majority of his policies are useless" and "I believe that the Second Amendment should be removed as a whole" were also heard. It is a shock that such comments were not tweeted about by the President.

The Senator received a good applause when he said "Mr. Trump can kill me and I can also kill him" and this is why America is the greatest country.

UNITED STATES SENATE INTERVIEW WITH THE EB

Reporter: What were your expectations from the committee? Did the delegates live up to them?

Imraan Sir: Yes, they lived up to them. This is my first LMGMUN and I've always heard that the level of debate here is very good. However, when we asked on the first day that how many of them were first timers then the majority of them raised their hands up. We were a little apprehensive about the working of the committee from the beginning. Today they really stepped up their game and for the school kids the level of debate is really good.

Reporter: What is your opinion on the working of the International Press in your committee?

Imraan Sir: I think they have been really supportive. The releases, whether it be the printed ones that we received or the ones that were uploaded online, were really good. They were rich in content and the photograph for the Vice President was amazing.

Dhruv Sir: I would also like to commend both the reporters. What usually happens at MUNs is that the reporter comes, sits for fifteen minutes, and sends an article and leaves. These two girls have been constantly on their toes, I don't know what they write for such a long time but kudos to them.

Reporter: Read the newsletter and you will know what they write.

Dhruv Sir- I have read it...

Imraan Sir- Which website did you read it on?

Dhruv Sir- Imgmun.com (Editor's note: It's Imgmun.org)

Reporter: What was the most absurd thing that you heard during the committee?

Imraan Sir- One of the delegates, Mr. Coons, said that if teachers were given guns for the protection of the children then they'd end up shooting them because they already hit them with sticks so now they will shoot them with guns. That was absurd at a different level.

Dhruv Sir- He said, "Even I can kill Trump and he can kill me."

Reporter: If your committee was a movie, which one would it be and why?

Imraan Sir (to Dhruv) - You answer this one. It is your forte.

Dhruv Sir- Dhamaal.

Imraan Sir- You don't even remember the movie. You just said Dhamaal because it is a Hindi word.

Dhruv Sir- Obviously. No, but it was Dhamaal in every sense because we were having fun, we were also doing our stuff.

Imraan Sir- I would say it is Hawra Bridge Par Naacht Hui Chudail.

Dhruv Sir- I've only heard of that while playing dumsharads.

Imraan Sir- We had a naacht hui chudial in our committee in the morning so...

Reporter: That's it. Thank you so much.

Imraan Sir- We wanted to make the interview funny, it wasn't funny. Ask us fun questions like who would you like to date in committee. Dhruv would have a whole list.

TRANSITION

A LOOK INTO THE TRANS LIVES OF GERMANY AND RUSSIA

Muskaan Rajpal writes about the contrasting lives that transgender people living in Germany and Russia have.

In simple terms, the word 'transgender' refers to an individual whose gender identity does not correspond with their birth sex. Russia is considered to be one of the worst countries when it comes to LGBTQ+ inclusive policies while Germany has one of the best LGBTQ+ supportive policies.

LEGAL GENDER CHANGE

Earlier, Russia did not have any procedures for transgender people to change their legal gender on documents. However, the Ministry of Health signed an order on January 22, 2018 stating that they would create an official procedure to issue medical certificates bearing the gender identity of transgender people. Earlier, they could only change their legal gender after sex reassignment surgery but so is not the case now.

Since 1980, transgender Germans could only legally change their gender after sex reassignment surgery and sterilization. In January 2011, these requirements were declared unconstitutional. Now, the person has to provide medical certificates proving their gender dysphoria and a professional doctor's consent to change their legal gender.

MEDICAL TRANSITION

In Russian history, transgender people were often diagnosed with 'Paranoid schizophrenia'. Even though psychiatric assistance is now provided for free as a part of state health care system, hormone replacement therapies, as well as gender reassignment surgeries are not covered by state medical insurance. Therefore, transgender people have to cover all expenses by themselves.

Transgender Germans face certain struggles too. The cost of psychiatric assistance, letters of recommendation, hormone replacement therapy and sex reassignment surgeries are covered by health insurance. However, there are waiting lists as long as 3 years for transgender people at therapists and hormone prescription clinics.

DISCRIMINATION

In Russia, teenagers are thrown out of classes for having a contrasting biological sex and gender expression. Transgender parents are denied custody of their children due to 'high risk of psychological trauma' for the children. They face the problem of invisible discrimination where they have to keep their gender identity a secret in certain situations so as to be safe.

In Germany, the government bans discrimination against transgender people in employment and the provision of goods and services. Hate speeches based in gender identity are not banned in all states but some states do prohibit them.

In conclusion, the policies for Transgender inclusion in Russia are not the best but changes are gradually happening and the Transgender activists are glad that their efforts are bringing about positive changes.

GCHQ

GOVERNMENT COMMUNICATIONS HEADQUARTERS

UNMODERATED RUCKUS

Zaina, Aishanya and Chhavi sum up the proceedings of the day (evidently dominated by infinite rounds of Unmoderated Caucuses).

"Should we break for tea?", said the Alternative Technology Researcher

Contrary to the usual routine, the delegates were involved in a heated discussion when the Alternative Technology Researcher's placard went up and he requested for 'Motion to break for tea.' A.k.a. the millionth Unmoderated Caucus.

Having mastered the art of wasting time, the Unmoderated Caucus proved to be of no help when a member of NSC complained that the directive asking MI5 to interrogate the functioning of GCHQ was so incompetent that it forced him to suspend GCHQ's powers to take external actions. The suspension fuelled the delegates and did what the EB members' plea for response and substantive discussion couldn't.

After half an hour of another 'five-minute Unmoderated Caucus', the delegates finally put forth directives and succeeded in restoring the credibility of GCHQ. (The EB would never be able to thank them enough for this kind gesture.)

The Agency executive of GCHQ and Chief of Joint Intelligence Committee were overjoyed and finally celebrated their version of Eid by hugging each other when the delegates refused another Unmoderated Caucus (quite surprisingly).

There was a visible marked improvement and the delegates came real close to what can be called a "comprehensive discussion". Maybe a little too late, but 'better late than never.'

REPORT

FIDEL CASTRO'S CABINET

THE REVOLUTION IN RAGE

Sara Batool and Fatima Zehra write of the final session with some words of their own.

This is the last report upon the Cabinet of Fidel Castro, Joint Crisis Committee, and since the opinions of the International Press were not given consideration at the end of the conference, we have decided to take that liberty ourselves. Today ends another edition of LMGFMUN, and we who have strived for it now ask for your attention a little more closely. As the final session of the committee wrapped up today, having achieved a compromisehaving avoided war with little advantage other than Cuba's temporary well-being, we feel it necessary to elucidate some things.

You have all worked hard to be the best in this committee. You have all worked hard to avoid a nuclear war that was already sidetracked more than sixty years ago. You have all worked hard to deal with crises in the best possible way. Even you who do not read our reports are a part of this, albeit an ignorant one. Take care, take care that when you go out into the world, you do not do what you do today. Take care that you do not make policies and lobby with compatriots and sketch directives simply for recognition. Take care that if Cuba is in your hands, you do not sell it off to the highest bidding capitalist to line yourself with fur. This is the danger we face today, the war we must avoid, the Marxism we must accept, as Castro did- to stand fierce in the face of temptation, of comfort that eases you in one moment and destroys you in the next.

But then, it is not a reporter's place to advise, is it? Very well then- Fidel Castro, show us where your revolution's still in rage.

JOHN F. KENNEDY'S CABINET

THE TA(B)LE OF TOUCHWOOD- THE EB'S DESK

Nooria Fatima and Spihra Mehrotra assess the emotions and experiences of the EB's table.

I am burdened, pretty heavily, with information from everywhere. You might have had times of FOMO (Fear of Missing out) but I have had my share of TMI (Too Much Information), and believe me, it is not pleasant at all. There are times when I am overcome with feelings of sympathy for the President and Vice President and want to reach out to them, pat their shoulders reassuringly and tell them it is all going to be okay. Pull up a chair and sit with me as I share with you my pitiful tale.

When a morning begins with an update, I realise the weight words on a paper have as chits, communiqués and directives flood upon my head. Today I saw the striving delegates struggling with the wicked hangover of the Joint Session held yesterday. I heard them cribbing about the Havana Pact, signed between Cuba and USSR, more than Camilla Cabello. I tried to decipher the discreet conversations I could hear rumbling when the President dropped a bomb (relax, not the nuclear kind), one where the revelation of a mole in the committee since day one once again turned the fragile trust into ashes. I felt the lady in black's frustration when she dumped crumpled tissues on me as the air conditioner joined the delegates in lousy work. Now I sit here and wait for the three delegates who have gone to negotiate with those Cubans because even though I hate being stranded in one place and thumped upon, I crave suspense and am intrigued to know how this promenade of crises end.

In retrospect, I might look like conglomeration of wood and nails to you, but I listen to you and pity the future of our world. Thank you for listening time, for this once.

FIDEL CASTRO'S CABINET

They have so thoroughly annoyed the IP with their incessant demands for coke that we nearly missed out their interviews on purpose. Meet the Executive Board for Fidel Castro's Cabinet- Chairperson-Satvik Agarwal, Vice Chairperson-Siddhartha Bedi, collectively known as Fidel Castro.

INTERVIEW WITH THE EB

Reporter: Did the Cabinet meet your expectations, if not, how do you think the delegates can improve?

Satvik Sir: Participate more, I think they could all engage with each other more. I don't think many were listening to the others while they were speaking so- participation.

Reporter: If your committee were to be a book, which would it be and why?

Siddhartha Sir: Fifty shades of Che.

Reporter: What was the most exciting thing to have happened during the conference?

Siddhartha Sir: (laughs) Raghav Kohli coming in and dunking Nunez with water that was like-amazing

Reporter: What was the most disgusting thing to have happened during the conference?

Siddhartha Sir- (looks at his feet while cleaning his toenails) This. I don't know how to describe it in words.

Satvik Sir- (Looks at Siddhartha's feet) Yeah.

Reporter: Do you really think that the ACs are to be blamed for a dysfunctional Cabinet?

Satvik Sir: YES.

Siddhartha Sir: YES! There can't be any chill without the AC.

Reporter: Why did you choose to chair this particular committee?

Siddhartha Sir: I'm not chairing.

Satvik Sir: I was really interested in this topic, this particular agenda and thought it would be-

Siddhartha Sir: But this wasn't the agenda

Satvik Sir: No it wasn't, it went through a lot of change, it was Batista and....aage samajh ni aa rha.

Siddhartha Sir: I did not choose this committee but I would always choose a crisis committee so..

Reporter: Did the IP live up to your expectations?

Siddhartha Sir: No, thanda nai mila

Satvik Sir: The opening video was amazing!

Siddhartha Sir: OH YEAH THE OPENING VIDEO! (claps)

Reporter: Rate the IP

Siddhartha Sir: Can we rate in decimals and negatives? Just asking.

Satvik Sir: Umm....probably a 9

Siddhartha Sir: 9, because they didn't get us Keventers and Coke.

Reporter: Describe your committee in three words.

Siddhartha Sir: Just Food Kids. That's the full form of JFK.

Reporter: What is the song that you would play on repeat in committee?

Satvik Sir: Chaiyan Chaiyan

Siddhartha Sir: Yeah, Chaiyan Chaiyan and the Cuban national anthem

JOHN F. KENNEDY'S CABINET

INTERVIEW WITH THE EB

The reporters sat down with Raghav Kohli, AKA President John F. Kennedy and asked for his opinions on the committee.

Reporter: How was your committee? What were your expectations and were they met?

Raghav Sir: The problem with a lot of crisis committees is that they become more fictional than historical and I think that it is also in some ways justified because the whole point of reliving the moment in history is to see how shaped up in a better way, or maybe worse. In this particular committee, the first day was a little slow and that the delegates were getting used to how one is supposed to deal with crises but I think they really picked up on the second and third days and the research showed that they understood the historical context in which the crisis was placed. It's not about solving a particular crisis, it's irrelevant because it's already been done. You know what the problems were, you know what actually happened, you know how everybody responded.

Reporter: How did the Secretary General of LMUN find his experience at LMG MUN 2018?

Raghav Sir: chuckles So, I haven't been MUN-ning as I said, for two years. The only reason why I came here is because it was La Martiniere and I absolutely do not want to say no to La Martiniere because it's my school too, right? Even if it's the girls' school, it's still La Martiniere and that's why I was really happy when I came back. During the opening ceremony, when I went on stage, I felt so nostalgic because the last time I stood there was during the Inter-Martiniere Debate two years back and that was a lot of fun as well. It's always great to be back to La Martiniere and I'm really happy that you all called me over. I am really grateful and I really enjoyed my experience.

Reporter: You're such a fan of The Beatles. Why don't you use any line from any of their songs to describe your experience at LMG MUN?

Raghav Sir: There are places I remember, all my life though some have changed. Some forever not for better, some have gone and some remain. All these places have their moments, with lovers and friends I still can recall, some are dead and some are living, in my life I've loved them all.

Reporter: If there was one superhero you would want to introduce in the committee, who would it be and why?

Raghav Sir: Definitely Captain America so that he could save us from the KGB before we could die.

Reporter: Have you been following 'The Spectator'?

Raghav Sir: Yes, I have been following 'The Spectator'. I could see the memes regarding the JFK's Cabinet in the Day 1 edition plus the Executive Board of the General Assembly highlighted 'The Spectator' as the 'Best Executive Board in the conference', so yes, I have been following it.

Reporter: What is something that you will take back from here?

Raghav Sir: I guess four days full of memories in the committee and out of the committee. Lucknow is always special for me. The whole time with both the La Martinieres was incomparable. They're the main things I will take back but also a lifetime experience. This was my first LMG MUN, surprisingly, I thought I would've attended more back in school, so yeah it was a lot of fun and I just hope that all of the Secretariat members also enjoy the experience because they did a brilliant job and I would like to congratulate them all for it.

Reporter: On a scale of 1-10, please rate the IP.

Raghav Sir: 10! smiles

ROLLING THE CRISIS JOINT

At 16:45 hours standard time, in a neutral place, two strangers (not so strange) called Cuba and USA met for a conversation. Here follows the conversation shared.

USA: Greetings, Cuba! Your communiqué was received and I went through its contents therefore, here I am to speak to you just as you wished for.

CUBA: Let's get down to business. Accept our demands or hard actions will be taken which might just include the usage of nuclear missiles. Beware.

USA: Well, if we're doing it that way... You have mentioned how you will stop further influx of weapons from the Soviet Union, but what about the other missiles of the USSR that are already well present within your territory? How about sending those back home?

CUBA: Well what about you being "WELL PRESENT" in the activities of Venezuela? How about YOU go back home? And talking of the missiles present in Cuba as of now, they will remain untouched for safeguarding my territory from an "IMPERIALISTIC AND INTOLERANT SUPERPOWER".

USA: NEWSFLASH- The United States of America is "The Land of the Free and Home of The Brave". We never walk the path of surrender. You have your demands and we have ours so listen close and listen well: Sacrifice all the Soviet arms you possess or the list of countries we sanction will have you on the top. Meanwhile, your nose out of Venezuelan affairs would serve you best.

CUBA: The arms present in the territory are unequivocally for defence purposes which is a great requirement when there are "people" like you present.

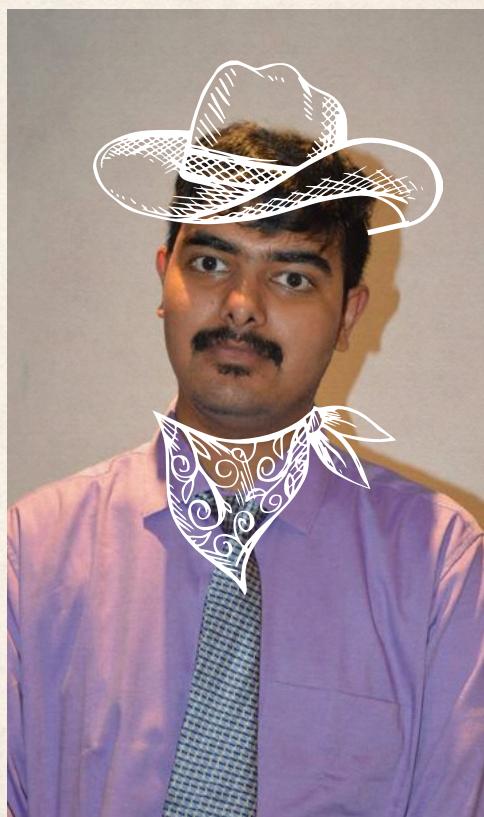

Both utter the words "offence" and "defence" seemingly a couple hundred times

USA: Say we agree to your terms of removal of our missiles from Italy and Turkey, can you provide us with precise details of the Soviet Union arms present in your territory.

CUBA: You'll get them when we get yours.

USA: Well, this was fun. We've had enough of the neutral place. Let us return to where we belong and deliberate on the...developments.

INTERVIEW WITH THE JOINT CRISIS DIRECTOR

Reporter: If your committee was an emotion, how would you describe it?

Akshay Sir: I would describe it using 3 words - Happiness, excitement, fun.

Reporter: How about if your committee was a TV serial, how would you then describe it?

Akshay Sir: CID? Haha, don't tell them I said that.

Reporter: How has your experience been so far?

Akshay Sir: 3 years of LMGMUN sums it up. I think it's been more of an emotional touch that I have, an emotional connect with this school than anything else.

Reporter: What's the wackiest thing you have heard in the committee?

Akshay Sir: "Remove the United States of America, please."

Reporter: If you could rate the IP out of 10, how much would you give it and why?

Akshay Sir: 11/10. The IP has been good but I still have a complaint- no one got me Coca-Cola.

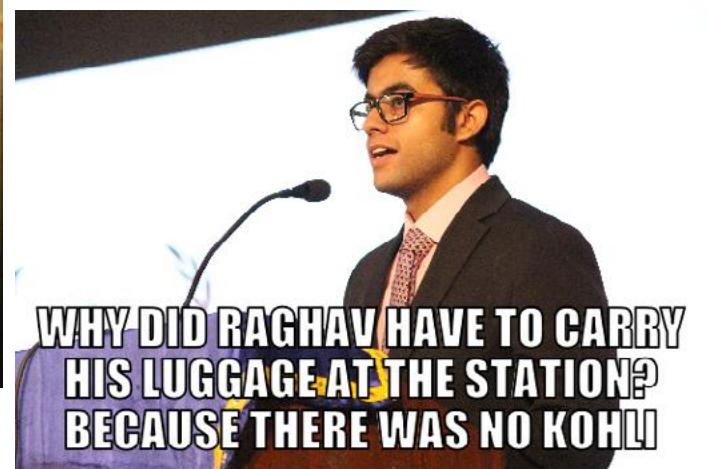

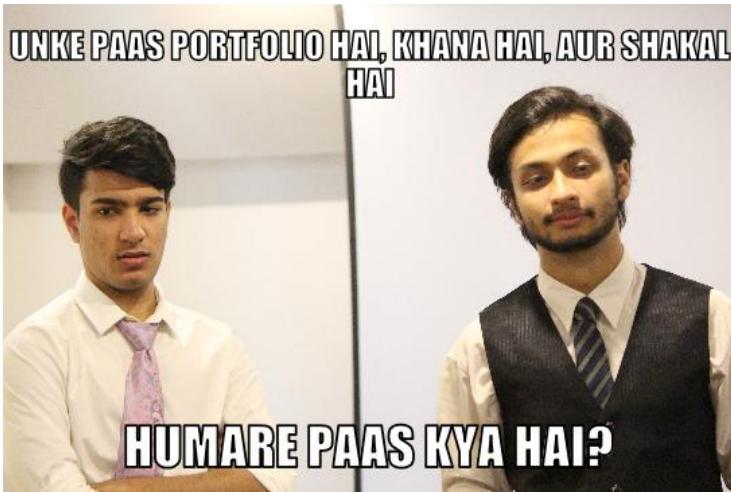

reassuring words were thereon exchanged

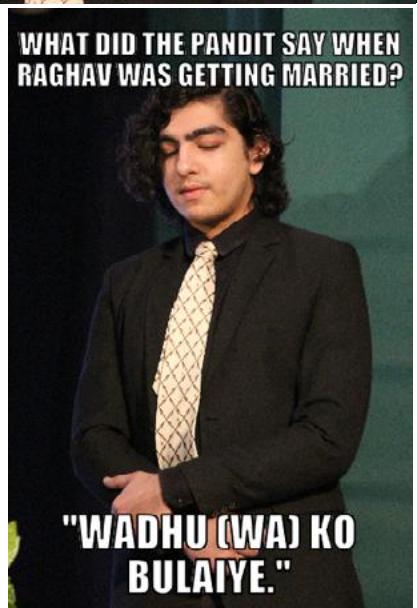

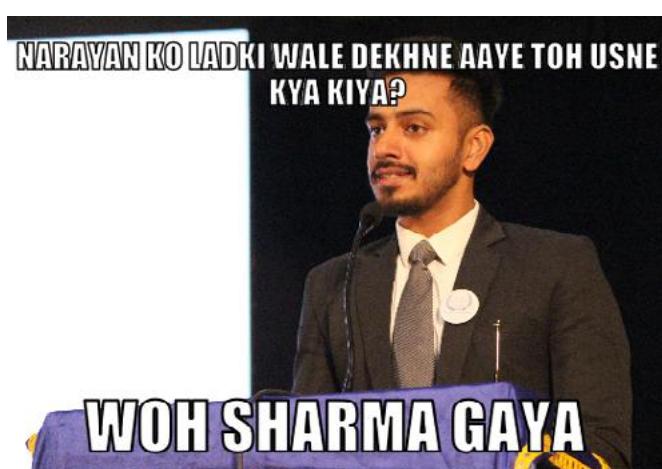

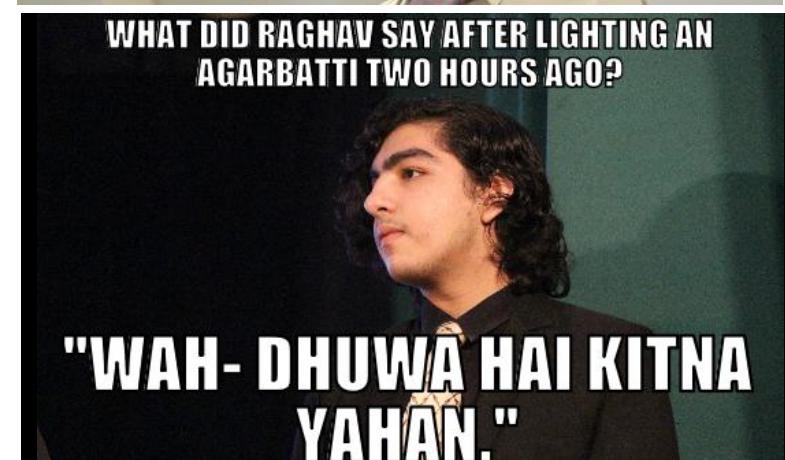

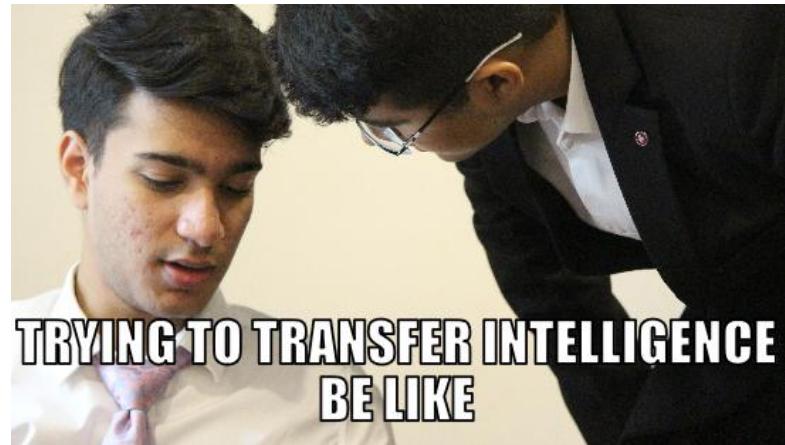

Reporter: What kind of culture do think MUNs breed?

Akshay Sir: MUN culture has changed drastically through the past few years. It has become more commercialised but I'm glad that LMG is still not in the commercialised form of debate and it still holds the actual essence of debate and encourages students to perform better in conferences.

LMGMUN'18

Closing Ceremony

NEVER SAY GOODBYE

Sara writes her last segment for LMGMUN'18 with a heavy heart, nostalgia of the past six months and the best memories.

It feels like only yesterday when the secretariat released the registration forms, the press was working all night to come up with the wittiest articles and the logistics were in school all day arranging even the tiniest bit of things we might need. All the hardwork, hours spent in school and midnight meetings came together in these four days to give you the highest quality of debate, the most competent mentors the best experience of your life!

The final hours of the conference, the closing ceremony began with the chief guest Mrs. Sehba Hussain encouraging us all to work harder, go out and help solve real world problems with. Mrs. Sehba Hussain is a famous Indian social activist belonging to Lucknow and is the treasurer and co-founder of Self-Employed Women's Association or SEWA in Lucknow. She is also the Executive Director of BETI or Better Education Through Innovation Foundation which is situated in Lucknow, in the year 2000. Sehba Hussain was awarded the Best Practises Award by UN-HABITAT in the year 2006. For about 17 years, she worked for UNICEF as a national as well as international professional. Some of her noted works include her contribution as State Representative of Uttar Pradesh, Chief Upper India Office for Uttar Pradesh and Bihar, Chief of Health Section of UNICEF India and Country Representative of Bhutan.

The Deputy Secretary General, Kashish Gupta went ahead to call up on stage the executive board members to give away the awards for their respective committees. As the awards were being given away we could see everyone's faces light up with pride, be it for themselves or their co-delegates the atmosphere was one we had never seen. The best delegation award was proudly received by La Martiniere for Girls, Calcutta. The logistic members and the support staff who is out there making the world a beautiful place for us, were the one of the most thanked and appreciated people, without them La Martiniere Girls' Model United Nations would not have been able to reach this level hospitality be it transportation or the food.

The Secretary General, Vanshika Sharma declared the conference closed with an aching heart, a wide smile and the promise to be back next year, bigger and better than ever.

Topic : The IP Newsletter

The various General Assemblies,

Reminding every person of the commencement and celebration of the 4th chapter of La Martiniere Girls' Model United Nations,

Noting with satisfaction and utmost pride, the efforts of the International Press in the compilation of the newsletter,

Stressing upon the fact that the International Press faced significant obstacles and difficulties while incorporating the newsletter but have come up with one that won't be forgotten even if someone were to go and back in time and try to make you forget about its existence,

Deeply concerned with the protection of all International Press members from those delegates who just want to give an interview for "fun",

Bearing in mind the fact that no member of the International Press has slept for the past couple of days working on the newsletter,

1. Encourages all delegates to download the LMGMUN newsletter each day of the conference, even if they didn't contribute enough to the committee to make to the final cut;

2. Welcomes all delegates to approach the IP and praise all its members and their hard work;

3. Urges all delegates to appreciate the efforts of the IP as it is the newsletter, that the delegates will have, as a memory of the Model UN on paper;

4. Requests all delegates to spread the word about the newsletter unapologetically and unabashedly;

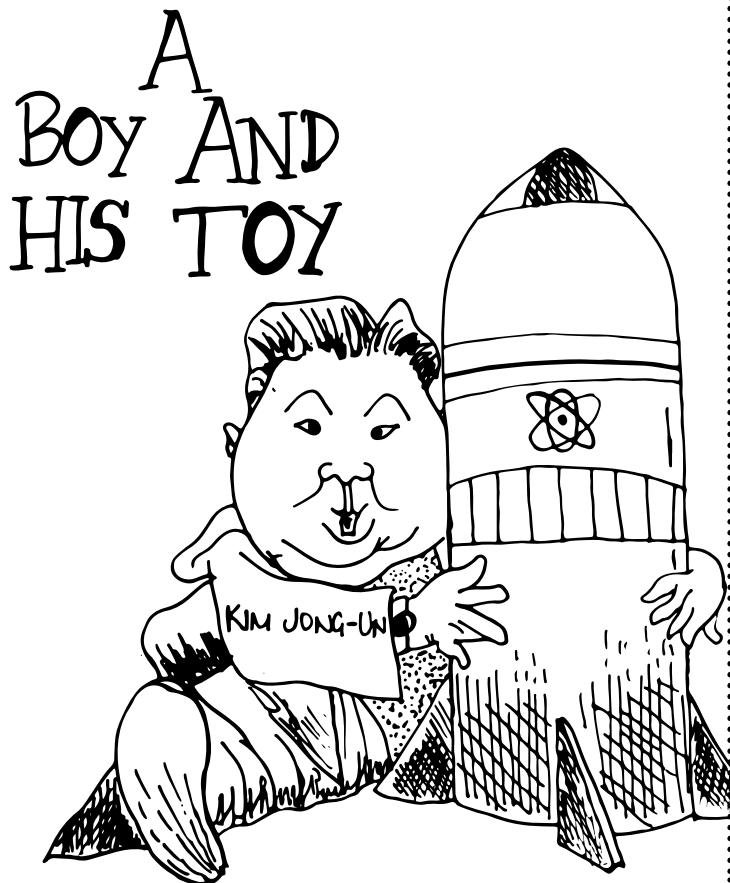

5. Stresses the continuing need for impartial acknowledgement of the IP of LMGMUN;

6. Calls upon all delegates to respond quickly with a generous feedback for the newsletter;

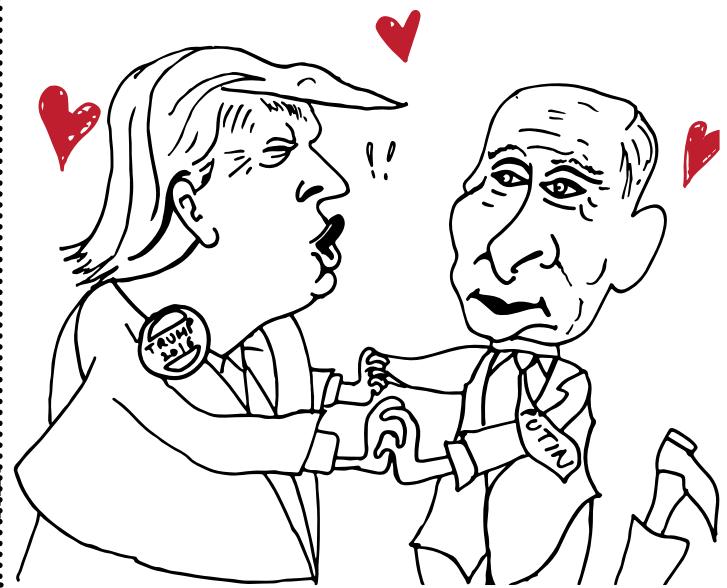

7. Insists that the right to reading the newsletter with appreciation being identified as a human right should be treated as such and dealt with care;

8. Requests delegates to encourage all their peers to participate in the next chapter of LMGMUN.

Message from the Head of IP

It's been four years since LMGMUN began. Four years--can't believe they bought into it for so long—and I was lucky enough to be there throughout the journey. And having been there, I have seen MUNners come and MUNners go (a constant source of delight, that last part). Being called upon to give a message today, there is one thing that strikes me extraordinarily clearly- it is that the MUNners who came then, who stuttered and stumbled and sometimes (or mostly) fell asleep during committees did all of it with one intention in their hearts- and it was that intention that redeemed whatever they did (as long as they weren't picking their nose, which was unforgivable back then). It was the fact that they attended the conference to learn, to attend and try to be a part of something greater in the world (not necessarily referring to the queue for biryani at the dinner after the socials).

Look at us- look at us today. What are you doing, you who have come merely for the glory and the biryani and kebabs? What are you doing for the people whose lives you discuss with such ardour today because you've been betting for your victory?

The media has long been degraded for being the media. You've seen them clicking pictures and laughing over your speeches and you've scorned what you think is their stupidity. Scorn on- but remember, they'll be laughing at you when all of this is over. And why should they? Let me elucidate.

I have seen the newsletter change drastically over the years. It has been a press release, Kulsoom's nightmare, a journalist's scribble diary (the most honest and hilarious of all) and I am immensely, immensely proud of what it has finally become today. The Spectator has become a Word. Do you know what that is? A Word is something that has an impact. Today, The Spectator does not simply report, it observes, thinks, forms opinions, defends those opinions, admires its lovers and trolls its admirers (EB, if you're reading- I'm sorry, that was specifically for you). We battle with pedophilia, discrimination and crazy delegates today- we show our support to the excluded communities of the world- and we rhyme in time to get the refugees their rights again.

I would like to thank everybody who has made The Spectator and the International Press of LMGMUN the awesome spoilt brat that fights for what it wants today. Reporters, I'm glad that you have shown your mettle in the battlefield- now you know the intellect that is yours and its worth. Anushree, your ass may be negligible, but your sass truly isn't- you've really kept me grounded when I'VE BEEN SO HIGH. Kulsoom- how have you put up with my whims? Kudos, tenth- grader- you've done what grandmothers haven't been able to do. You're awesome, but you're too thin for me to love you. Isheta, Devishi- you cat- sniffers, I wish you'd got those cat ears along during the conference. Thanks for being annoyed with me and still not setting me on fire. Kritika, meri bacchi, thanks for all the horrible pictures your photographers took of the EB and the delegates- no jokes would've been possible without them. Also- you're life. Mrs. Ambili- how do I thank you enough? I can't do it- every time I say thank you I just recall that I'll never sit in your Political Science class again- and then I get soppy. Mrs. Dass, thank you for letting us appear as we must out there in the world, for this taste of life with all its battles, for helping us become humans in the true sense of the word.

And lastly, THANK ME FOR BEING THE AMAZING BRAT THAT I AM.

Want to say XOXO, but won't

Sincerely,

Kaishnani Dube
